I was asked to run with Alex Honnold and talk to him about running, fish, and climate change in the beautiful Ruby Mountains of Nevada! Thanks to @outsidewatch, @outsidemagazine, and @travelnevada, I had the opportunity to share a bit of my story, partake in some cowboy poetry, and explore the wild Ruby Dome in the Ruby Mountains with Alex and crew!

Travel Nevada's "Get a Little Out There with Alex Honnold" can be streamed via Outside TV today, February 26th! Visit outsidewatch/GetALittleOutThere to watch on demand. Y'all can check later in March to see Alex and I's time in the Ruby Mountains as we attempt the snowy Ruby Dome in the season finale!

Episode 1 Mt. Charleston

Nevada's most prominent peak is only 45 minutes outside of Las Vegas, but that's where the "only" stop. This challenging trail gains almost 5,000 feet of elevation in just over 8 miles, winding through aspen forests and mountain meadows toward the exposed ridgelines that mark the second half of the ascent. The views from the nearly 12,000-foot summit are remarkable, but the entire hike is stunning, with towering limestone cliffs for company throughout.

You have a new travel series, "Get a Little Out There with Alex Honnold," premiering this month. How different is it from the intensity of projects like "Free Solo" and "Skyscraper Live"?

Oh, it's so different. I mean, a travel show is all about exploration and adventure and meeting interesting people. It was a project that for me was super fun to do. The throughline through these things is that it's a project that I get to work on where I'm like, oh this is so cool, it's different, I'm learning something, it's interesting. It's (set in) my home state (of Nevada), but I got to see all these cool things that I don't normally see, have good climbing adventures, (and) meet interesting people around the state.

"We have to redefine our sleep situation," a happily exhausted Honnold tells PEOPLE, fresh from his Netflix success. "I woke up, like, every 45 minutes" travelneveda @ F: World-renowned climber @alexhonnold has always lived life on the edge.

That's part of why he made his home in Las Vegas—minutes from some of the best climbing on Earth. And yet, even with all he's seen and done, his home state still finds plenty of ways to surprise him.

"Get A Little Out There with Alex Honnold" premieres February 2026 streaming on Outside TV.
